PREFATORY NOTE

The present edition of the Historical Catalogue of Brown University follows closely the general plan and scope of the edition of 1895, the first English catalogue of officers and graduates of the University and the successor of the old Latin catalogues, issued at approximately regular intervals from 1772 to 1886.

This previous edition has been carefully revised and largely supplemented. The rapid growth of the graduate body, fifteen hundred and ninety-eight in the last ten years, has so increased the size of the catalogue that it has been found necessary to limit somewhat the amount of the data in the personal sketches. Titles of publications have been limited to those of books, smaller publications being summed up in some general phrase. With the exception of changes of address, all data given closes with the summer of 1905.

A brief history of the college, an exact copy of the original charter engrossed on parchment and preserved in the archives of the University, and a list of the officers of administration and instruction arranged in order of appointment have been added.

In the case of degrees conferred by other colleges, the name of the college at the date of conferring the same has been used.

In addition to the list of graduates, a complete list, so far as known, of all who have been students at the University, but who did not complete the amount of work requisite to a degree, has been given. This list has been compiled from the annual catalogues and is doubtless far from complete. After 1800, the date of the earliest annual catalogue, the students are arranged according to the class with which they first entered college. The data given is necessarily brief and fragmentary, but it is hoped that the list will at least present a basis for the compilation of a more complete one.

A glance over the 5329 first degree graduates of the University shows that 2700, or slightly over 50 per centum of the entire body have entered the professions. These are divided as follows: 1039 lawyers; 910 ministers; 471 physicians; and 280 college professors. Of the latter, 41 have been college presidents.

Notwithstanding the fact that every effort has been made to have the data as accurate and complete as possible, many errors doubtless will be detected in the present edition. The editor will gladly welcome any information that will serve to perfect future editions.

Grateful acknowledgment is made of the valuable assistance rendered by Mr. Harry Lyman Koopman, Librarian of the University, Professor George Grafton Wilson, Secretary of the Alumni, the Class Secretaries, Alumni, and others.

MARY D. VAUGHAN,
Keeper of the Graduate Records.

History of Brown University

A GENERATION before the establishment of any institution of higher education in Rhode Island, Dean (afterwards Bishop) Berkeley, in pursuance of his cherished design of planting a Christian college in America, chose this colony as his place of residence. Here, at Newport, or in its vicinity, he lived for nearly three years, from 1729 to 1731. At the close of this period it became evident that the money which had been voted by the House of Commons would not be paid, and Berkeley reluctantly abandoned his project and returned to England. Though he had no direct relation to the college afterwards established, yet he inspired an interest in higher education among the colonists, and thus made easier the success of the later undertaking.

In 1762 the Philadelphia Baptist Association, in view of the disabilities attaching to Baptist students in most of the existing American colleges, welcomed a proposal offered by the Rev. Morgan Edwards, a clergyman of Welsh birth, at that time pastor of the First Baptist Church in Philadelphia, to found in Rhode Island a college that should be under the control of their own denomination. James Manning, who had just been graduated from Princeton, was appointed by the Association as its agent to establish "a seminary of polite literature subject to the government of the Baptists."

In deciding upon the location of the new college, a canvass of the colonies had shown the advantages to be clearly on the side of Rhode Island, which recognized absolute religious liberty, and was, moreover, a Baptist colony in origin and popular attachment. There was no rival institution in the field; and the important cities of Newport and Providence, the former being the second city in New England, furnished an encouraging prospect of future support. Accordingly, in 1764, the friends of the movement obtained from the General Assembly the charter which still remains in force. Although, under the rules of the charter, the President and a majority of both the Fellows and the Trustees must be Baptists, the three important positions of Chancellor, Secretary, and Treasurer are without denominational restriction, and all religious tests and sectarian instruction are strictly prohibited. The institution was known during the first forty years of its existence as Rhode Island College.

As the college was at the beginning without funds, and only a scanty return could be expected from students' fees, it was necessary that the president should support himself and his family by some other means. The founding of a Baptist church in Warren, and the call of Mr. Manning to its pastorate offered a solution of the difficulty; and hither Mr. Manning brought his family in the spring of 1764. His first act towards the establishment of a college was the opening of a Latin school. This preparatory school was later removed with the college to Providence, where it flourished for a hundred and forty years under the name of the University Grammar School. At the second meeting of the corporation, September 4, 1765, Mr. Manning was formally appointed "president of the college, professor of languages and other branches of learning"; the first student had been matriculated the day before. In the following year David Howell was appointed tutor, but no other addition was made to the faculty until 1774. In 1769 the first class of seven members was graduated at Warren. This town had not generally been regarded as the permanent seat of the college, and the necessity which now arose of erecting a college building compelled a final choice of location. After a spirited contest for the honor among the leading towns of the colony, the choice fell upon Providence. Here in 1770 the first college building, the present University Hall, modeled after Nassau Hall at Princeton, and a house for the president were both built on the college grounds, the cost being covered by subscriptions, chiefly from residents of Providence.

In 1771 President Manning was called to the pastorate of the First Baptist Church in Providence; he served the church in this capacity, in addition to his college duties, from that date until the close of his life. In December, 1776, the work of the college was interrupted by the Revolutionary war, and it was not resumed until the fall of 1782, University Hall meanwhile being used as a barrack and hospital for the combined American and French troops. Upon the reorganization of the college important additions were made to the library and the philosophical apparatus. In 1791, after twenty-nine years of service as founder and director of Rhode Island College, President Manning died. The college had become firmly established, with a graduate roll of 149; the last graduating class, that of 1790, had numbered 22. At the time of his death the faculty consisted of the president, four professors, and two tutors. The discipline during this period had been strict and paternal, the officers of instruction living under the same roof with the students and making frequent visits of inspection to their rooms. President Manning at first taught all the branches studied, but was designated professor of languages, afterwards of moral philosophy. David Howell, his assistant, taught mathematics and natural philosophy, and is said to have taught also French, German and Hebrew. He was appointed professor of natural philosophy in 1769, and of law in 1790, but never taught the latter subject. A professor of natural history was appointed in 1784; and a professor of mathematics and astronomy in 1786.

The first college funds, amounting to $4500, were collected in England and Ireland by the Rev. Morgan Edwards in 1767-68. In the next two years the Rev. Hezekiah Smith obtained subscriptions amounting to $2500 in South Carolina and Georgia. The former contribution was made a permanent fund; the latter was expended in the construction of the college buildings. Further gifts were received for a time from the Philadelphia, Charleston, and Warren Baptist Associations, but they appear to have ceased with the outbreak of the Revolutionary war.

The successor of President Manning was the Rev. Jonathan Maxcy, a graduate in the class of 1787, who had been professor of divinity 1791-92. He served from 1792 until 1802, when he resigned his office to accept the presidency of Union College. During the last year of his administration at Rhode Island College a class numbering 28 was graduated.

The third president of the college, the Rev. Asa Messer, a graduate in the class of 1790, who had served as professor of learned languages 1796-99, and of mathematics and natural philosophy 1799-1802, directed the affairs of the institution from 1802 until his resignation in 1826. During his presidency of twenty-four years the college was greatly expanded. A class numbering 48 was graduated in 1825, the faculty in that year consisting of the president, nine professors, and two tutors. A medical school was established, which existed from 1811 until 1828, and sent out 87 graduates. The special professorships created for the medical school were materia medica and botany, 1811; anatomy and surgery, 1811; chemistry, 1811; theory and practice of medicine, 1815. A professor of moral philosophy and metaphysics was appointed in 1811; one of oratory and belles-lettres in 1815; and one of the Latin and Greek languages and literature in 1825. In 1792 Nicholas Brown, a graduate in the class of 1786, gave $500 with which to purchase law books for the Library. In 1804 he endowed a professorship of oratory and belles-lettres. In the same year the name of the institution was changed in his honor to Brown University. In 1822 Mr. Brown built Hope College at his own expense. In 1826 the permanent funds of the University amounted to $31,300.

The fourth president, the Rev. Francis Wayland, entered upon his official duties in 1827. He at once raised the standard of scholarship, and gradually increased the scope of the instruction. He finally accomplished an entire reorganization of the University on the basis of the elective principle. In accordance with this "New System" the bachelor's degree was given for a three-years' course, and the master's degree for a four-years' course. Graduate study and special study were both encouraged; and the sciences, in accordance with the spirit of the charter, were made prominent in the curriculum. This system was not put into operation until 1850, and was fully in force only until his retirement five years later. The increase in the scope of the curriculum during President Wayland's administration is clearly shown in the following list of subjects to which professors or instructors were assigned at the dates annexed: chemistry, physiology, and geology, 1834; moral and intellectual philosophy, 1834; belles-lettres, 1835; rhetoric, 1837; Hebrew literature, 1838; modern languages and literature, 1843; Greek, 1843; Latin, 1844; French, 1844; history and political economy, 1850; natural philosophy and civil engineering, 1850; chemistry applied to the arts, 1850; rhetoric and English literature, 1851; didactics (i. e., pedagogy), 1851; analytical chemistry, 1854.

The influence of President Wayland was felt not so much in the increase of the number of students as in the higher intellectual and moral tone of the institution. Discipline, which had grown lax, was strictly enforced. During his administration the college grounds were laid out, and the Library was placed on a sound financial basis. The permanent funds were increased to $200,000, and three important buildings were erected: Manning Hall, given by Nicholas Brown in 1834; Rhode Island Hall, erected in 1840 from subscriptions by Rhode Island men and women; and the second President's House, the gift of Nicholas Brown, built in 1840. The last named building has been used since 1899 as a refectory.

The total value of Mr. Brown's various gifts to the University was not less than $160,000. Mr. Brown also served the University in a most efficient way as treasurer 1796-1825. He was trustee 1791-1825, and fellow from 1825 until his death in 1841. Dr. Wayland resigned the presidency in 1855, having won for the University, by his fame as a writer, thinker, and educational reformer, an enviable distinction both at home and abroad.

The fifth president of the University, the Rev. Barnas Sears, a graduate in the class of 1825, held office from 1855 until 1867, when he resigned the presidency to become general agent of the Peabody Education Fund. During his incumbency no new subject was added to the curriculum, except physical geography, in 1864. Although the term of President Sears covered the financial crisis of 1857 and the Civil War, a notable increase was made both in the funds and in the number of students. A system of scholarships was established, and over $220,000 was collected in subscriptions. The Chemical Laboratory was built in 1862. In the last class that entered under President Sears seventy-three students were enrolled. Three hundred graduates and students of Brown entered the Union service, 1861-65. Of these twenty-one laid down their lives.

The Rev. Alexis Caswell, a graduate in the class of 1822, was the sixth president of the University, his term covering the years 1868-72. Under his administration the department of physics was organized, and the endowment was increased from $365,000 to a sum exceeding $550,000. The Jenks museum of zoölogy was founded in 1871.

Upon the resignation of Dr. Caswell, the Rev. Ezekiel Gilman Robinson, a graduate in the class of 1838, was chosen his successor. His presidency extended over the seventeen years from 1872 to 1889. This period was marked by a further increase in the attendance, the class of 1889 being graduated with a membership of fifty-six. The following subjects were added to the curriculum, or were emphasized by the appointment of separate instructors: special branches of agriculture, 1872; zoölogy and agriculture, 1874; physiology, 1874; botany, 1877; zoölogy and geology, 1878; elocution, 1880; astronomy, 1884; logic, 1886; history, 1888; political economy, 1888. The funds were increased to $980,000, and important additions were made to the buildings. Rhode Island Hall was enlarged in 1875. The Library, the gift of John Carter Brown, of the class of 1816, was built in 1878, and Slater Hall, the gift of Horatio Nelson Slater, in 1879. Sayles Hall, the gift of William Francis Sayles, a memorial to his son, William Clark Sayles, a member of the class of 1878, was built in 1881. University Hall, which had been renovated in 1850, was again renovated in 1883. Dr. Robinson recognized the fact that a great opportunity for a university existed at Brown, and, though he was not able fully to realize his purposes, he prepared the way for the great enlargement of the institution under his successor. Various courses were added, and a beginning was made in systematic graduate study. Dr. Robinson resigned the presidency in 1889.

The eighth president of the University was the Rev. Elisha Benjamin Andrews, a graduate in the class of 1870. With his accession in 1889 the modern life of the University properly begins. In the year preceding his presidency three graduate students were enrolled; in the last year of his term of service the graduate students numbered 101, the total number of students for the same years being, respectively, 268 and 860. The officers of instruction for the corresponding years increased in number from 22 to 73. All the old departments were expanded, and the number of departments was increased from 16 in 1889-90 to 25 in 1897-98. The department of philosophy was enlarged by the addition of psychology and pedagogy. American and European history were assigned to separate professors, political economy was made a department, and the department of social and political science and law was added. The department of fine arts was created, including the history of art, and music. The new department of Indo-European philology was introduced. The departments of Greek and Roman literature and history, English literature and language, and Germanic and Romance languages and literatures, were reorganized and extended. Rhetoric and oratory were made an independent department. The new department of Biblical literature and history was formed, including the Semitic languages and New Testament Greek. The departments of mathematics, mechanical engineering, astronomy, physics (including electrical engineering), chemistry, zoölogy, geology, and anthropology, and botany were extended in scope and thoroughness. New departments were formed for the subjects of mechanical drawing, civil engineering, comparative anatomy, military science and tactics, and bibliography.

The museum of fine arts was founded in 1889, and that of anthropology in 1891. The funds were increased to $1,125,685, and important additions were made to the buildings and grounds. In 1891 Hope College was renovated, Wilson Hall, the bequest of George Francis Wilson, was built, the Ladd Observatory was presented to the University by the Hon. Herbert W. Ladd, and the Lyman Gymnasium, named in honor of its principal donor, was erected. Maxcy Hall was built in 1895. Three buildings, known as the Howell, Messer, and Brown Street Houses, were also secured for dormitory purposes. The old playground of the University, now known as Lincoln Field, was graded and fitted up for ball games and other athletic purposes in 1889. In 1898 a new athletic field was laid out on Camp Street, a mile and a half from the University. In 1891 the Grand Army of the Republic Fellowship Fund of $10,000 was given to the University by the Rhode Island Department of that organization.

The Women's College was founded in October, 1891. At first only the privileges of University examinations and certificates of proficiency were granted. In June, 1892, all the College and University degrees and the graduate courses were opened to women. In November, 1897, the institution was accepted by the Corporation, and officially designated the Women's College in Brown University. The immediate charge of this department, as of all others in the University, is in the hands of the Corporation. All instruction is given by members of the University faculty. Pembroke Hall, which was built by the Rhode Island Society for the Collegiate Education of Women, was formally transferred to the University in October, 1897, and was accepted as the recitation hall of the Women's College.

In 1898 Dr. Andrews resigned the presidency to become Superintendent of Schools of Chicago. Dr. Benjamin Franklin Clarke, the senior member of the faculty, who had served as president pro tempore during the absence of Dr. Andrews in Europe in 1896-97, was appointed president ad interim, and served during the academic year 1898-99.

The ninth president of the University is the Rev. William Herbert Perry Faunce, a graduate in the class of 1880, who entered upon his official duties on Commencement Day, 1899. At Commencement, 1900, announcement was made of an addition of over a million dollars to the endowment of the University. To this was added a year later a second million, including the endowment of the John Carter Brown Library. In 1900 the Slater Memorial Homestead was presented by Mrs. Horatio N. Slater, as a home for the students of the Women's College. In 1901 the Van Wickle gates were formally opened, and in the same year the President's House was erected at the corner of Hope and Manning streets. In 1902 the Van Wickle Administration Building was completed, this structure as well as the gates being the bequest of Augustus Stout Van Wickle, of the class of 1876. In 1903 Rockefeller Hall, the gift of John D. Rockefeller, was opened for the use of the Brown Union, a social organization of students and alumni which was formed in that year. The building is provided with a maintenance fund raised by subscription. In the same year the Engineering Building on Lincoln Field, Caswell Hall, a dormitory fronting on Thayer street, and the Colgate Hoyt Swimming Pool, the gift of Colgate Hoyt, were erected, and a great organ, the gift of Lucian Sharpe, of the class of 1893, was placed in Sayles Hall. In 1904 the John Nicholas Brown gate was built as a memorial to the late John Nicholas Brown by his widow. In the same year the Carrie Tower, a clock tower, erected by Paul Bajnotti, of Turin, to the memory of his wife, Carrie Mathilde Brown, was presented to the University. Since 1901 an iron fence with brick and stone posts has been built in place of the old wooden fence around the front and the middle campus. Each section has been contributed by or in memory of some class. The classes of 1872, 1884 and 1887 have contributed gates, that given by the class of 1884 being in memory of President Robinson. In April, 1904, the funds of the University, exclusive of those pertaining to the John Carter Brown Library, amounted to $2,492,198.

The Library of the University dates from 1767, when the Rev. Morgan Edwards collected books for it in England. The collection was at first kept in University Hall. It was removed to Manning Hall upon the completion of that building in 1835. In 1842 it contained ten thousand volumes, and in 1878, the date of its transference to the present building, its volumes numbered forty-eight thousand. The present number, including the books in the twelve department libraries, but not including the John Carter Brown Library, is about one hundred and thirty thousand volumes. Upon the removal of the College to Providence in 1770 the professors and students enjoyed the hospitality of the Providence Library Company, now the Athenæum, in extension of the scanty resources of the College Library. The Library of the Rhode Island Historical Society and the State Law Library have in later years been most valuable adjuncts to the University Library, and, since the opening of the Providence Public Library in 1878, members of the University have made constant use of its choice and readily available resources. The Library Fund, established under President Wayland, has been supplemented by ten special funds, devoted to the departments of European history, United States history, mediæval and church history, botany, the arts of design, biology, the classical languages and literatures, English literature, and American poetry. Gifts of one thousand dollars each were made to the Library in recent years by the classes of 1872, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, and 1888, and were of material assistance towards enabling the Library to meet the ever-growing demands made upon it by the work of the University. In 1884, by the will of the Hon. Henry B. Anthony, the Library came into possession of the Harris Collection of American Poetry, numbering 5000 volumes. The present number is about 7000. In 1901 there was presented to the University the John Carter Brown Library, unquestionably the most complete collection in the world on the history of the two Americas down to the end of the eighteenth century. The books were accompanied by a gift of $500,000 as an endowment, and $150,000 for the erection of a building for their accommodation. The building was dedicated in May, 1904. In October, 1903, the University received by the gift of Marsden J. Perry, of Providence, the Sidney S. Rider Collection of manuscripts, books, and other material, forming a library of the first importance to students of the History of Rhode Island.

*The following is an extract from the records of a meeting of the Corporation held September 6, 1804:

A letter from Mr. Nicholas Brown, dated on this present day, having been read in the following words, to—wit:

PROVIDENCE, September 6, 1804.

Gentlemen:

It is known to you that I have long had an attachment to this institution as the place where my deceased brother Moses and myself received our education. This attachment derives additional strength from the recollection that my late honored Father was among the earliest, and most zealous patrons of the College; and is confirmed by my regard to the cause of Literature in general. Under these impressions I hereby make a donation of Five Thousand Dollars to Rhode Island College, to remain in perpetuity as a fund for the establishment of a Professorship of Oratory and Belles Lettres. The money will be paid next Commencement and is to be vested in such funds as the Corporation shall direct for its augumentation to a sufficiency in your judgment to produce a competent annual Salary for the within mentioned Professorship.

I am very respectfully, Gentlemen, with my best wishes for the prosperity of the College, your obedient friend,
